

Things in Place Professional Organizing Services

About Standolyn Robertson

---

She:

- Is the founder of Things in Place®, a professional organizing consulting service located in Waltham, Massachusetts. Established in the year 2000.
- Is President of NAPO the National Association of Professional Organizers.
- Works with business professionals and entrepreneurs to eliminate office clutter and establish productive tools for success in the workplace. She designs office organizational systems tailored to the unique learning style of her clients.
- Is the past president of NAPO-New England. She has also served as co-chair and a presenter for “Organizing U.”, an evening of public seminars on organizing, and as membership liaison for the chapter.
- Is a past board member and Programming Director of the National Study Group on Chronic Disorganization. She is also an annual conference presenter for NSGCD.
- Earned her designation as a CPO®, Certified Professional Organizer.
- Has received her Level 2 Specialist Certification from the National Study Group on Chronic Disorganization.
- Earned a degree in education from the University of Massachusetts
- Is featured in the media, including the NY Times, USA Today, Boston Globe, Boston Herald, NPR’s Here and Now to name a few.
- Sharpened her organizing skills and insights through a very colorful career. It’s a career that includes work in human resources at Universal Studios Orlando, in retail management, in community service—and as a working mother.
- Is uniquely qualified to develop a comprehensive, one-of-a kind, business project plan that has the right blend of wisdom, strategies, insights, and ideas that are practical, and can be implemented immediately.

She currently resides in Waltham, Massachusetts, and spends much of her free time traveling with her husband and two college age sons.

Clear space, clear mind

